Black Mountain Road, Black Mountain

Project update

Multiple crews have been working across the Black Mountain Road landslip site to complete the key works designed to provide long-term stability.

Piling has continued over the last couple of months, with all 266 piles on track to be completed in October. The piles create a large structural frame where the road is anchored to a deeper underground section beyond the area of failure.

In early September, the soil nail crew moved onto the installation of almost 70 anchor-like structures upslope, which is to further support the concrete structure.

The site continues to be highly constrained with piling rigs, cranes, soil nail rig, concrete trucks and general earthmoving equipment. For this reason, site access cannot be permitted for non-construction traffic, including during the Christmas shutdown period.

BE PREPARED

With the weather warming up, residents are reminded to keep their household emergency plan up to date. Having a plan means everyone knows what to do if the weather takes a turn.

Council continues to liaise with local emergency services about access to the area, and in an emergency situation responders will work together.

Information, Support and Referrals with Julia

For those impacted by natural disasters it is important to remember there is no set time to recover and everyone's experience will be unique.

Various factors, including the impact on daily life, financial strain, access to services, relationship stress, coping strategies, and previous mental health issues, can influence recovery.

Some people are able to heal with time, while others might need additional assistance. If you've noticed you or a loved one's wellbeing, social connections, or quality of life is being impacted and it's not improving over time, it could be a sign that extra support is needed.

Black Mountain residents can access our Support Worker, who can provide information on local services and assistance if you need any additional support. Visit Julia at the Cooroy library or contact her via the details below.
